me of a great commercial metropolis, where boats could be equally well accommoda at high or low water, and where the what cht be surmounted by ample and noble look see, above ordinary floods, we find summit of the wharf should be we ws of interior houses, greatly below the water mark, which shut off nearly all acnd, at low water the deficiency is nearly as sat. The harbor has been allowed to fill up til it will soon become no harbor at all with ut the use of a dredging machine. Beargrass cek, which, when it rose, used to wash our barbor, is now shut off and the projection rent along the shore so that the harbor is filling up. A great aid to this is found in the sewer from Fourth street, which brings in the city fith Is there are we dom or foresight in such man agement? The rows of shabby houses along t e lower h if of the wharf, which now die grace the city trout and the proper wharf space are not, all together, worth a fraction of the value which the ground they occupy would b worth to the call as a high water wharf.

Think of the vast difference of appears between a city with a high, broad, noble-look ing wharf, backed by a street of lofty war couses, hotels, &c., and a city which, like ours appears too stingy or too poor to provide stan ing room for its commerce, and which, instead of presenting a respectable front, offers but the shabbiest posterior view along its river margin to the stranger. But half is not yet told. Aside from the contracted and shahby look of the city front, and the deficiency of high-water wharfa great portion of the wharf and harbor. About e-third of the entire wharf has been left to fall into the possession of the Canal Company which has run its walls along the wharf, virts ally making it a portion of the canal. Why the City Fathers should have fallen into a Rig Van Winkle sleep, while their property was ap iated by an anamalous corporation, would be hard to tell.

It is certainly time they should be awakened. te canal company might with equal propriety have one up their walls above the mouth of argraes, and taken possession of the whols wharf. Their free and easy appropriation overs a space worth not less than three hundred thousand dollars, at a fair estimate; and his, too, is opposite the heart of the city, where wharfage is doubly necessary, because, alough business is tending westward, the wharf ot go any further west than Ninth street. ay be suggested that the canal has not of much, as the lower portion of bor too narrow to be very valuable. Not so. The lower portion of the harbor is the very best and cheapest location for a high-water whatf: and if it be narrow at low water, what Linders it from being widened? Why not blast off the rocks on the Corn Island side, and make the harbor as wide and deep as need be? Leave d from the Rowan heirs to extend in that direction, and the rock obtained ould pay for the blasting and would serve to Tave the wha f and streets. Let the clty anthorities then go to work and give no a mide where and a wide harbor I w them reclaim what they have lost, and give no a good wharl from Sixth to Ninth streets, and make similar improvements as far as practicable from Sixth to Fourth streers. Improve the whole wharf from Ninth street up as high as commerand remove a impediments. The Canai Comparty should be required to surrender their usurpations, and all private interest in the way be eximpulated by purchase. Any reasonable ex penditure in that way paid for in city bond would be a good investment for the city, as they would, in the natural course of the city' growth, be epaid by the screaling value c. y revenue before the debt wou d be maid

THE ITALIAN OPERA-IL TROVATOR AT WOOD'S THEATER LAST NIGHT -Despite one inclement weather, Wood's Theater was crowd ed again last evening by l'elite of our city t n to the we -known and fav rite stra s o Ve di's chef d' were. Il Trovatore Much ha been said and written about the merit, of Vor d, e compositions. These we do not propose to iscuss here. One thing, however, is certain that his operas have created a sensation who and wherever produced, and have kept the stage as favorites of the public for ve Irevatore is without donbt, one of the best, it no the very best of the great m stro's works. I. is fur of flowing me.ody, well instrumen ed -and gives the performers ample scope t display their respective abilities. This was ed upon by the artistes last evening, one d all. We do not remember to have heard masterpiece better rendered than it was la t night.

Mme Gbioni, who made her first appears here as Leopora, at once established herself as stage. Her Cavatina in the first act was a mas ter work of vocalization, and was warmly apislanded. In the fourth act she roused the indience to enthusiasm, and the famous miscere was loudly redemanded. It may not be out of place here to mention that il Trovatore was originally written for Mms. Ghioni. was she who first introduced it to the publiand so made herself and the great maestro

Verdi immortal.

Kme. Strakosch was in excellent voice and sang eplendidly. Her acting was perfectly grand. The New York Heraid has deservedly compared her to the great Rachel in the part of Azucens. She was frequently applanded, and may feel proud of her success last night. Sig. Macaierri, as Manrico, displayed his wonderiul tenor voice to the best advantage. Here we have a real tenor robusto, one who sings high C from the chest as only Temberlik can do .. He was deservedly called out after the rere to receive the plaudits of the public. Sig. Mancuel is a most conscientious artist and sang and acted the ardnous part of the Count finely. We must especially mention this ntleman's exquisite rendering of the Aria II

The secondary parts were well filled, and the orus and orchestra, under the direction of Signor Rosa, were all that could be desired. Signor Rota is without donbt the best conductor of Italian opera who ever visited Louisville To-night we are to have Flotow's charming opers of Martha with the following great cast: Lody Henriotta M'lle Pauline Can'use Nancy M'me Patiti Strukosch Lomed Burne Grif Flunkein Herr Grif

Sharp in the apper part of the city, where he had been assaulting and abusing every one e met, and creating a general turbulence. The Scher was but in a street ear for conveyance jail, and, when at the corner of Sixth and Main, he jumped live in the ear and attempted to make his e-cape. The efficers had an exciting run after him through Sixth street to the river Several shots were fired at the fugitive, which tended only to accelerate his speed. He was ecaptured on the levee and conducted to prison t is said that Sharp need brass knucks in his assaults upon several persons, whom he tried to rob. He will be presented on the charge of attempted robbery.

UNEXPE TED VERDICT .- Mack Skean, the coung man who was jointly indicted with anna Spencer for the murder of George Day, ir., at Sull hur Well ab int the 1st of Septem ber last, was yesterday convicted of manslangbter, in the Circuit Court, and sent to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The verdict of the jury seemed to surprise every one who heard the trial. It was the popnlar belief that Skean would be acquitted. We know that crime is frightfully on the increase and that the courts should entorce the laws with strictness, in order to prevent the further mission of offenses; but juries should be particular, and see that no one is convicted simply to furnish an example to intimidate nalatectors. FROUDE'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND-A NEW VIEW OF A HISTORICAL CHARA TER .- Froude, in his history of England, does not attempt to 'whitewa h' the character of Henry the Righth; he does not represent him as an Apollo or a saint, or seek to adorn an imaginary hero with fictitious and cutravagant virtues. But on the contrary, in a plain, straightforward, although most eloquent narrative, he states the historical facts, such as he has gathered them, and seeks to enable his readers to judge for themselves of the characters he describes on the irdi-putable evidence of his own words national experiences during the last six years should be able to appreciate II my's position for it is a curious fact that our national develop ment, while suppressing the Southern rebel to has been in several respects a reproduction of that of England during the Reformation. This is so true that not unfrequently Mr. Fronde's judgments pronunced upon the acts of Henry and his ministers in a given emergency are direct culogiums of the policy of our own statesmen. The position of the two countries was in many respects identical, They were alike in their isolation, and alike in being exposed at the same time to the hostility of foreign powers, and to a combined attack of ernal treschery and rebellion. Their dangers and their triumphs were of a similar nature. and in Henry we can trace precisely the same processes of development which we have just titnessed in the representatives of our Government. Rapidly awakening to a conscious of the terrible responsibilities weighing upon him: gaining with each day a more comprehe sive view of the crisis that he was called upon to meet, like the representatives of our Govern ment he gathered up his strength to meet each new demand of that crisis, instead of permitting himself to be crushed by difficulties seeming insurmountable. Like them, as his enemies became more powerful and aggressive, he ecame sterner and stronger, more self-conscious and self-reliant; and, as dangers dark sed around him, more confident and serene. And, finally, as the representatives of our Government have guided our country safely through the criess of a civil war, so also did Henry guide England through the most dangerous social, political, and religious revolution that she has e er passed, so wisely that never on a single seemed impossible that she should not be

But without approving of Mr. Froude's his method, or the results he is able to reach by it, or even undert king to criticise the applig've a brief outline of what may be called, in d was of the word, his "argume his an crity denied by perpetually-recurring rebendone in Ireland—compelled to guide a re-1 al reviution, to check civil rebellions, and e vert demestic treachery in England-mathem b, wo Popes and excommnn to one-betrayed by all the monarchs in Eq. rope whom he trusted only to prove their treachery-single-handed and alone, it was his hard task to meet all the power of Christendem combined against him, while at the same time compelled to subdue the disaffection of his his own subjects.

Surely such a combination was enough to test the strength of the strongest, and yet never do we find that the King of England qualled. Both in his foreign and domestic policy, as honest and sincere as wise and diplomatic, he was equally successful in overthrowing the schemes of inimical sovereigns, and in controlling the factions by which his own nation was divided. He subdued every obstacle, was victorious over every toe, and, advancing with the progress of the age, not only freed England from the au-thority of the Pope, but before he died placed her in the foremost rank among the Protestant

Surely such a work, the greatest ever achifor a country by any monarch, should be encuch to win for him the gratitude of poeterity; and, as for his tyranny, whatever his deeds may have been, that he did not transcend in them the legitimate exercise of his anthority is wed by the fact that he never lost the love and veneration of his own people, and never raced to command the increasing respect of foreign powers.

Stern and unrelenting he may have been (as time rolled on it was inevitable that he shoule become so), for the times were stern and debecome sol, for the times were stern and co-manded severity. By the record of deeds of vio-lence the annals of his reign may be darkened, but in periods of revolution what is called mor-cy more often than otherwise is but another me for weak ness and treachery. The scaffold at his command may have been stained with blood, but we must not forget when principles are at stake the blood of the noblest victim may be "sacrifice and not murder."

Again, glancing at the sale point of Henry' career remaining for consideration, Mr. Froude argues that if the facts of history sustain him as a monarch, for more explicitly do they clear him from the charges that have been brought against him of crneity and profugacy in his domeetic life. Paithful for thirteen years to an unlovely and noloved partner, he finally sought a divorce from Catherine of Arragon, not merely on the greated of feeling, but at the eager desire of hipeople and ministers, who saw in a second arriage the only hope of saving England from the most imminent perile; and his snit which Clement assumed in the scale in which the interests of Protestantism and Catholicism bung suspended. It became the motive power enabling the Reformation to lift itself from the inert body of a decaying faith.

And as for Anne Boieyn, for seven yearswhile his suit for a divorce was pending-he waited with nnexampled patience, in order to e'evate the woman whom he loved to his throne without scandai. And three years after her marriage, convicted of crimes so atrocious that the pen shrinks fr m recording them, she was condemned to die, not by the king, but by the insulted majesty of the law, represented i ber care by a judge and jury, c misting of all the noblest peers of the realm.

Enrely not to Henry should be charged this rrible event, any more than the trials of his later marriages-in which he was pursued by absolutely he was the victim of an irreversible em-should be attributed to him as crimes. When a dynasty is about to close-when, for ome mysterlous cause nuknown to us, a fami-

y, for long centuries prosperous and powerful, is about to become extinct, about its lingering sentatives darkly gather, like clouds about the setting sun, monrpful events, dismal catastragedy about being enacted by nature hers f for their final loss. Such were the tragedies that darkened the life of Henry the Eighth. The hand of fate rested upon the hanghte race of the Tudors. The decree had gine forth and they were to pass away. Vainly did Enged by royal princes, the noble pledges of the 1 er looking forward into the future, yearn to be hold his own crown encircling the brows of his posterity It was not to be. By a second strange ity his only successors to the throne were the two daughters, both of whom he had disinherited, and both of whom were themselves childless; and the curse of domestic disaster pursued blm to the grave. But it is inconceive ab'e that for such a cause his great deeds shou'd his n med covered with obl quy and shame. Apart from the unique excellence of pre ing faithful po traits of the ch racter that he erlies, Mr. Fronde's History is so admirable in sivile, so just in temper, and searching in an lieis, that, whatever we may think of his
